EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN NURSING

Aarushi Aggarwal

The experience of the COVID-19 pandemic over the last year has shone light on the importance of global healthcare systems and healthcare professionals. Doctors and nurses have been at the forefront of this evolving crisis-in caring for patients, driving research into understanding the virus and its risks, and developing solutions to overcome future threat. For all the progress made since March 2020 in dealing with the pandemic, a large degree of credit can be attributed to the community of healthcare professionals, both doctors and nurses alike.

The nursing staff are often the primary caregivers in hospitals, healthcare centres, nursing homes for the elderly, and at-home medical setups. They are also, often, the first healthcare professionals that patients interact with at these healthcare centres, including emergency services. This makes nurses indispensable in healthcare provision. As the world charts its future out of the pandemic, close attention must be paid to creating a robust global network of nursing staff through appropriate employment opportunities and community enablers. This task becomes yet more important as the world prepares to battle oncoming healthcare challenges that have created the need for more professionals in this space.

First, in countries across the world—from Japan and China in Asia to Italy, Portugal, Finland, Greece and Germany in Asia—populations are rapidly ageing (defined as percentage of total population above the age of 65 years). In addition to the risks that an overwhelmingly ageing population poses to a national economy, it also creates a need for quality and easily accessible healthcare services and professionals. This has created a great need for well trained and qualified nurses who can fill the gaps in healthcare systems. Furthermore, since older patients require care round the clock, it would be necessary to create a fraternity of nurses who are acquainted with ailments specific to geriatric patients.

The second challenge facing the world is the worsening incidence of lifestyle diseases. The preponderance of ailments like diabetes, high blood pressure and heart conditions are not only common in affluent societies like the United States, but also increasingly common place in countries like India where the changing nature of the job market has forced more individuals into sedentary lifestyles. The lack of exercise worsens the effects of sitting all day at a desk, thereby contributing to the frightening increase in cardiovascular diseases (CVDs), among other problems. Nearly 10 million people in India suffer a cardiac attack every year; annual deaths caused by CVDs has been projected at 4.77 million in 2020, rising from 2.26 million in 1990. Coronary heart disease prevalence rates in India have

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES IN ENVIRONMENTAL AND SUSTAINABILITY STUDIES

Vijay Prakash Srivastava

Environment is something that has always remained with us and will continue to be so. May be for this one reason we have taken the environment for granted and the result is there for all of us to see. There is pollution, water sources are depleting, we find lesser greenery around us and extinction of many creatures has already taken place. This damage to environment has created many problems. Natural resources are diminishing fast and our surrounding is becoming less liveable. World over voices are rising to stop this damage to environment, enrich it with plantation and biodiversity and work towards sustainability for the larger good of human beings and millions of other species inhabiting this planet. If you share this concern, the academic discipline of environmental and sustainability studies may be the one made for you.

World Environment Day
June 5, 2021

Environmental Science has existed as a discipline for decades. However, the kind of attention it is getting now was not seen earlier. World over environmental and sustainability concerns are becoming paramount and to address these concerns more professionals and practitioners from this discipline are needed.

Environmental Studies is not just one subject. It is an interdisciplinary course comprising inputs from Biology, Chemistry, Physics, Ecology, Earth Science and few other subjects. As the name suggests, the course focuses upon the environment as well as events and processes taking place in the environment and on the Earth.

The purpose of environmental education

The purpose of environmental education inter alia includes making students aware of the basics of environment, scientific perspectives of environment and major issues confronting our environment, social perspectives of environment, issues in global environmentalism, drivers of ecological changes and how these affect us, role of wildlife, environmental risk assessment, causes of environmental pollution and mitigation strategies, planning for environment, supply and demand equation of natural resources, laws relating to environment, environmental ethics and philosophy etc.

Environmental education helps people to explore the sustainable way of living and how to use natural resources effectively without harming the environment.

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES IN ENVIRONMENTAL AND ...

environment is generally discussed as a chapter in text books. The idea is to make students aware about environmental issues. Formal education of environmental science can be undertaken at undergraduate level. Students may either go for B.Sc. degree (three years) in Environmental Science or for a B.Tech degree (four years) in Environmental Engineering. To seek admission to any of the above courses, students should have taken science subjects (Physics, Chemistry, Biology) at their 10+2 level.

At postgraduate level, you may pursue any of the following courses in environmental studies, subject to eligibility:

M.Sc. in Environmental Science
M.Tech in Environmental Engineering
MBA in Environmental Management
All the above courses have a duration of two years.

What is covered in Environmental Studies

Environmental Studies deals with larger issues of earthquakes, pollution, global warming, floods, waste management and sustainable development. At postgraduate level, the course will include topics such as acquisition, transformation and utilization of energy in the environment, geochemical and hydrological cycles, concept of ecosystem, structure and composition of atmosphere, air and water pollutants, surface and subsurface water; water chemistry, soil profile and composition, mineral matters in soil, biodiversity, climate change, mining and its impact, environmental policy matters, regulations and laws, social perspectives of environment, forestry, population and consumption, impact of urbanizations on environment, issues in global environmentalism, community and environmental awareness, sustainable development and its constituents, ecological and environmental economics; environmental data collection, remote sensing, environmental impact assessment, natural resources, renewable and non-renewable energy resources; reserves of oil and gas, greenhouse effect, conservation, environmental ethics, communication and education, global and cultural issues in environment among others.

Sustainability forms a part of Environmental Studies and can also be a full-fledged course.

The discipline of Sustainability Studies, the topics covered shall include concepts of sustainability, sustainability as a science, sustainable development and its different constituents, sustainability of society, resources and ecosystem, ecological economics and its usefulness, impact of development on biodiversity, environment and trade, cost of environment, natural resource accounting, development indicators and human health etc.

Under the Environmental Engineering, the focus obviously would be on action and planning systems to keep the environment safe. The course may included topice such as physical-chemical processes in environment, environmental chemistry and microbiology, numerical methods, environmental sanitation, designs for waste water treatment, energy systems in environment, solid and hazardous waste management, air and noise pollution control, surface and ground water modelling, water environment biotechnology and geo-technology, energy system and environment, environmental impact assessment, climate control and disaster management.

Availability of Courses

Most of the universities in India have a Department/School of Environmental Science (nomenclature may be different) that offer courses in the Environmental Science subject. These include:

Devi Ahilya University, Indore; Bundelkhand University, Jhansi; Andhra University, Visakhapatnam; Goa University; Gujarat University, Ahmedabad; Kurukshetra University, Haryana; Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi; University of Mysore; Mangalore University; Cochin University of Science and Technology; Awadhesh Pratap Singh University, Rewa; Jiwaji University, Gwalior; Bharati Vidyapeeth, Pune; Shivaji University, Kolhapur; North Eastern Hill University, Shillong; Rajasthan University, Jaipur; Dr Rammanohar Lohia Awadh University, Faizabad; University of Kalyani, West Bengal.

In addition, many agricultural universities offer undergraduate/post-graduate/research courses in Environmental Science/ Engineering. For example, Tamilnadu Agricultural University at Coimbatore has courses like B. Tech. (Energy and Environmental Engineering) and M.Sc. in Environmental Science and M.Tech (Environmental Engineering). Forestry Research Institute, Dehradun has acourse named M.Sc. Environment Management. CEPT University, Ahmedabad conducts a Master's programme in Conservation and Restoration. Kerala Agricultural University at Thrissur has an integrated course (B.Sc+M.Sc.) in Climate Change Adaptation, Forestry (Forest Biology and Tree Improvement)/ (Natural Resource Management)/ (Wildlife Sciences), M.Tech Agricultural Engineering Soil and Water Conservation Engineering.

Many IITs offer courses in Environmental Engineering at undergraduate, postgraduate and research level. For example, IIT Kharagpur has a joint M.Tech-Ph.D programme in Environmental Engineering and Management.

Indian Institute of Science Education and Research (IISER) having centres at Berhampur, Bhopal, Pune, Kolkata, Mohali, Thiruvananthpuram and Tirupati offers five years integrated BS-MS course in different science subjects including Earth and Environmental Sciences.

Related Subjects

Finding a career in environmental matters is also possible for students of Atmospheric Science, Meteorology, Horticulture, Forestry and Wildlife. In the courses on public policy, issues related to environmental policy are also covered.

Work Opportunities

A qualified environmentalist has the opportunity to find a job in commercial, industrial, governmental, non-profit sectors. These jobs exist in the areas of pollution control, waste/solid waste management, engineering, law, conservation, fisheries and wildlife, among others.

There are varied work opportunities under Environmental Science/ Engineering and Sustainability. Industries are required to follow the prescribed guidelines to ensure that environmental damage due to their activities is minimal. Distilleries, food processing industries, refineries, fertilizers, textile/dying units and chemical plans have to follow strict environmental guidelines. Most of such industries have environment monitoring cells. These cells are required to conduct assessment on a number of fronts ranging from habitat, water, sound and displacement of people due to construction. These have to be managed by people qualified in environmental subjects.

Consulting opportunities in environmental matters are also available. Many companies outsource environment-related tasks and problems to environmental consultants. Newly promoted or proposed projects are needed to submit an environmental impact assessment certificate to the concerned governmental agencies. In many cases, consultants are approached to prepare such reports.

Nature of roles and responsibilities involved in the environmental sector jobs comprises of designing programmes and processes for cleaner air and water, conservation of our natural resources, planning of urban and rural waste disposal, studying manufacturing units, factories and industries for environmental design and implement standard operating procedures, sustainable development planning, studying climate change and global warming and finding ways to minimise their negative effect, providing technical support in environmental matters, advise private and government agencies to innovate and develop environment friendly products and services and formulating or canvassing for public policies favouring environment protection.

For highly educated and experienced environmentalists, opportunities may be available with global environmental bodies and United Nations agencies such as United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP), World Health Organization (WHO), Worldwide Fund for Nature, etc. One may also look to work with national and international organizations engaged in reduction of global warming, pollution and ozone depletion.

With corporates becoming increasingly conscious of their corporate socialres - ponsibility and public image, and in view of stricter, enforcement of environmental regulations the demand for qualified environmental professionals is expected to continue rising. Once the COVID-19 pandemic eases, the industrial activities will gain momentum which in all likelihood will bring more opportunities for environmental professionals.

Another excellent career is in Indian Forest Service for which examinations are conducted by the Union Public Service Commission every year. Selected candidates in the beginning are appointed as Divisional Forest Officers (DFO) and later move to higher positions either in Central or State administration.

Teaching opportunities in the subject are extensively available at colleges, universities and agricultural universities both in India and abroad.

If you choose green energy as your work area, that would also count as environment related career.

National Green Tribunal, National Horticulture Board, National Biodiversity Authority, National Institute of Oceanography, Central Pollution Control Board are few organizations under Central Government which need people qualified in environmental matters. Many state governments too have bodies like Environmental Planning and Coordination Organization (Madhya Pradesh). Council of Scientific and Industrial Research (CSIR) has few units in which environmental scientists are needed.

Environmental Journalism

A number of non-governmental organizations (NGO) are directly or indirectly engaged in protection of the environment. Some of these NGOs operate at global level. One may choose to work with any of these.

Research Opportunities

Many of the secrets of the environment are still unknown or required to be explored further. Environmental Studies offer ample scope for exploration and research. A research programme can be pursued after your postgraduate qualification (MA/M.Sc./ M.Tech) in environmental studies or a related subject. Research opportunities are offered at IITs, NITs, agricultural universities and Indian Institute of Science.

Given below is a list of institutions offering focused research opportunities in Environmental Science:

- Centre for Ecological Sciences, Indian Institute of Science, Bengaluru
- Centre for Mining Environment, Dhanbad
- Centre for Environment Education, Ahmedabad
- CPR Environmental Education Centre, Chennai
- Salim Ali Centre for Ornithology and Natural History, Coimbatore
- Centre for Environmental Management of Degraded Ecosystems, Delhi
- Tropical Botanical Garden and Research Institute, Thiruvananthpuram
- G.B. Pant Institute of Himalayan Environment and Development, Almora, Uttarakhand

If one wishes to pursue a Ph.D in Environmental Science, one may appear in National Eligibility Test (NET) conducted by the National Testing Agency. This test is conducted twice a year. One may apply for NET after postgraduation or when one is about to appear in the final examination of their postgraduate course.

Agricultural Scientist Recruitment Board of Department of Agricultural Research and Education, Government of India conducts a combined examination for National Eligibility Test, Agricultural Research Service (ARS) and Senior Technical Officer (STO). Those holding Master's degree in Environmental Science are eligible to appear for this examination.

Those who want to study abroad can find excellent opportunities of pursuing degree/research as many universities in developing countries are well known for their programmes/courses in Environmental Management/ Science/ Technology.

As an environmental professional, you have the opportunity to make the world a cleaner and more liveable place.

(The list of educational/research Institutes mentioned in this article is indicative. There are many more such institutes offering courses in Environmental Management/ Science/ Technology.)

What is Mucormycosis or 'Black Fungus' disease and why is it affecting COVID-19 patients?

Mucormycosis has recently been reported in large numbers among COVID-19 patients in India. Also known as the 'black fungus' disease in common parlance, the fungal disease is becoming a cause of concern as it can be life-threatening. The Ministry of Health and Family Welfare (MoHFW) has urged the States and Union Territories to make mucormycosis a notifiable disease under the Epidemic Diseases Act, 1897. The Ministry has asked the States and UTs to make it mandatory for all government and private health facilities and medical colleges to report all suspected and confirmed cases to the respective health departments through the district-level chief medical officers and subsequently, to the Integrated Disease Surveillance Programme (IDSP).

What is mucormycosis?

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) defines mucormycosis as a serious but rare fungal infection caused by a group of moulds called 'mucormycetes'. These fungi live all around in the environment, particularly in soil and in decaying organic matter, such as leaves, compost piles, or rotten wood. The infection, as per the Indian Council of Medical Research (ICMR), mainly affects people who are on medication for other health problems (diabetics or immuno suppressed individuals) that reduces their ability to fight environmental pathogens. Sinuses or lungs of such individuals get affected after fungal spores are inhaled from the air. Mucormycosis can also develop on the skin after the fungus enters the skin through a cut, scrape, or burn.

Are there any different types of mucormycosis?

Yes, according to CDC, mucormy-cosis has different types. Rhino Orbital Cerebral mucormycosis and Pulmonary mucormycosis are the two that are being reported among the COVID-19 patients. The former occurs when fungal spores are inhaled and in turn causes infection in nose, orbit of the eye(s)/eye socket, oral cavity, and can even spread to the brain. The latter occurs when the fungal spores reach the respiratory system and affect the lungs.

The other types are Gastrointestinal mucormycosis (more common among young infants than adults), and Cuteneous mucormycosis (occurs after the fungi entor the body through a break in the skin).

What are the symptoms?

According to the ICMR, symptoms include pain and redness around eyes and/or nose, fever, headache, coughing, shortness of breath, bloody vomits, and altered mental status. Pain in sinus, bleeding nose, chest pain, and swelling on face may also be seen in someone infected with mucormycetes. A COVID-19 patient is suspected to have been infected when s/he has:

- Sinusitis - nasal blockade or congestion, nasal discharge (blackish/bloody), local pain on the cheek bone
- One sided facial pain, numbness or swelling
- Blackish discolouration over bridge of nose/palate
- Toothache, loosening of teeth, jaw involvement
- Blurred or double vision with pain; fever, skin lesion; thrombosis & necrosis (eschar)
- Chest pain, pleural effusion, haemoptysis, worsening of respiratory symptoms

EN Explains

According to ICMR, not all cases with blocked nose as cases of bacterial sinusitis, particularly in the context of immunosuppression and/or COVID-19 patients on immunomodulators, should be counted as mucormycosis. However, one must not miss warning signs and symptoms and should not hesitate to seek aggressive investigations, as appropriate (KOH staining & microscopy, culture, MALDI-TOF), for detecting fungal etiology.

Why has it become a matter of concern for COVID-19 patients?

Mucormycosis is not a new disease. Such infections were reported even before the pandemic. Its incidence however was very low. Now, due to COVID-19, this rare but fatal fungal infection is being reported in large numbers. Coronavirus Disease Associated Mucormycosis (CAM) is being seen in patients who are either recovering or have recovered from COVID-19. This is because medicines used in treating COVID-19 bring down the count of lymphocytes which lead to a medical condition called 'lympho-penia', which makes COVID-19 patients much more susceptible to the fungal infection. In addition, COVID-19 patients undergoing oxygen therapy in which humidifier is being used, are prone to fungal infection if water in the humidifier is not cleaned and refilled regularly.

How can mucormycosis be prevented?

Mucormycosis is a rare disease which mostly affects people who have a weak immune system due to steroids, uncontrolled diabetes mellitus, co-morbidities (post-transplant/malignancy), have undergone voriconazole therapy, or had a prolonged ICU stay. ICMR suggests usage of masks whenvisiting dusty construction sites, wearing shoes, long trousers, long sleeve shirts and gloves while handling soil (gardening), moss or manure, and maintaining personal hygiene including thorough scrub bath.

Other crucial directions include controlling hyperglycemia (high blood sugar), monitoring blood glucose level post COVID-19 discharge and also in diabetics, using steroid judiciously (correct timing, correct dose and duration), using clean, sterile water for humidifiers during oxygen therapy, and using antibiotics/antifungals judiciously.

It is important to note that mucormycosis is not a communicable disease.

How can mucormycosis be treated?

Mucormycosis is a serious infection and needs to be treated with prescription antifungal medicine, usually Amphotericin-B. MoHFW, along with Department of Pharmaceuticals and Ministry of External Affairs (MEA), is making proactive efforts for significantly ramping up domestic production of Amphotericin-B drug. The Union Government has also made effective efforts in supplementing the domestic availability through securing supply from global manufacturers.

There are five existing manufacturers of Amphotericin-B in the country, namely Bharat Serums & Vaccines Ltd, BDR Pharmaceuticals Ltd, Sun Pharma Ltd, Cipla Ltd, Life Care Innovations, and one importer Mylan Labs. Five more manufacturers have been given the license to produce the anti-fungal drug within the country. These are NATCO Pharmaceuticals (Hydera-bad), Alembic Pharmaceuticals (Vadodara), Gufic Biosciences Ltd (Gujarat), Emcure Pharmaceuticals (Pune), and Lyka (Gujarat). Cumulatively, these companies will start producing 1,11,000 vials of Amphotericin-B per month from July 2021. The Government is trying to proactively facilitate these five manufacturers to prepone some of this production so that these additional supplies begin in June 2021. In addition, the MoHFW is also trying to procure other antifungal drugs which can be used in treatment of mucormycosis.

In some cases, treatment may involve surgically removing all dead and infected tissue.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES IN NURSING

been estimated over the past several decades and have ranged from 1.6 per cent to 7.4 per cent in rural populations and from 1-13.2 per cent in urban populations. This makes India among the worst afflicted countries in the world.

Extending care to patients of such Non-Communicable Diseases (NCDs) is imperative, especially since proper care at the hands of a medical health professionals can prevent sudden worsening in conditions and ensure proper at home care. Such professionals can also be deployed in the civil society to create awareness around the rising trend in such diseases and help a lay person understand measures at their disposal that can prevent, lessen the risk of or manage such diseases. For the nursing staff, this has created immense employment opportunities that must be filled at the earliest possible.

The pandemic has also created an opportunity for governments across the world—at the centre and local levels—to expand their healthcare outreach and create systems that support urgent response. In order to prepare for the possibility of another virus like Covid-19 causing SARS-Cov2-devastating the global economy, governments must rapidly expand their healthcare infrastructures and extend them to rural areas and remote communities where healthcare services may be considerably weaker. This ought to be an urgent undertaking especially since the possibility of a consistently mutating SARS-Cov2 has not been eliminated yet. If the virus takes on yet another virulent form, nurses would be required on the frontlines to help combat its fallout.

At present, the nursing staff deployed to deal with Covid-19 has been on a relentless active duty for well over a year. The deep fatigue, accentuated by the anguish the pandemic has caused, has made the need for more nursing staff very apparent. In the next phase of this pandemic, new nurses can take on a leading role in extending care to patients. A greater number of nurses in areas with high number of cases can also ensure proper care to patients less at risk so that any deterioration in health can be addressed rapidly. Nurses are also central to vaccination programmes; in most places the jab is in fact administered by a nurse. Vaccination programmes are likely to last years, especially if a mutating coronavirus does not cease to threaten the world. This opens more doors for nurses to join the global workforce and ease the healthcare burden.

India sends a large number of nurses every year to the Gulf countries, Europe and other English-speaking nations. Supporting them is a vast network of nursing institutions where candidates can pursue a diploma, graduate or post-graduate course in nursing or train in midwifery. The length of a diploma programme is two years while a bachelor's degree in nursing takes four years to complete (three years in distance learning). Nurses may also further specialise in different fields like critical care nursing, neuro care, operation theatre nursing and education, among others. The Ministry of Health and Family Welfare hopes 22,000 new nurses will enter the profession annually. At present, India lacks 1 lakh auxiliary nurse midwives and 4 lakh general nurse midwives. Given India's focus on strengthening its healthcare systems, for the present and the future, these positions will be filled sooner rather than later. As the global community prepares for a hopeful pandemic-less future of robust health systems, the future of the nursing profession looks particularly bright.
